Eight years ago the Democratic party nominated W. J. Bryan for president and the mention of the name of Grover Cleveland was hissed and his picture turned to the wall. This year Bryan will be again nominated, but the convention adjourns to do honor to Cleveland's memory. Is it not funny?

Tom L. Johnson, Mayor of Cleveland, and the only Democrat that has ever been able to carry the city, is certainly having it handed to him at the Denver convention. He and his friends so far have had about as much chance of securing any of the honors of the convention as the proverbial snow ball has of existing in that hot climate.

Seventy-one dead, 2,624 injured by toy arms and fire-works on the Fourth. This is a terrible indictment against our manner of celebrating the anniversary of our independence. Surely it is time that some steps were taken and some way devised to prevent this large list of fatalities and maimed each year. There certainly can be no great love of country in so celebrating our independence as to render ourselves unable to serve her. The list of fatalities this year is the largest in over ten years, but the injured are about 1,200 less than last year. This would indicate that the movement for a sane and sensible Fourth is bearing some fruit. Let us hope that this movement will be given an added impulse by this year's terrible record, and that injuries and fatalities will be no more in this day.

Nowadays Perils of Merchants.

The real danger of managing a store, nowadays, is that it will get into a rut. The merchant who is afraid to "make a noise" who dreads the day his bills fall due; who is afraid to "spare money for advertising," who devotes most of his time to watching little things, to worrying about trifles—he is in danger.

In effect, he is trying to found and build a store on his fears, not on his aspiration; on misgivings, not on confidence. He forgets that fear is a destroyer—not a builder; that misgivings will pull down that which confidence would build to completion.

It is a dangerous thing to fetter a store with a lot of baseless fears of what might happen; to dread what might follow the exercise of ordinary aggressiveness and enterprise. Under such conditions, the merchant's policy itself is the very worst calamity that could happen to the store.

Such a policy places a store in the position of depending upon "location," chances of various kinds; and upon the patronage of those people who do not read advertising. These, however, are so scarce in this city that if they all patronized one store they could not support it.

The merchant who advertises adequately builds upon his hopes, not upon his fears. Confident and aggressive advertising makes store management a business fit for men—men of nerve, resource, red blood.

LOVE LETTERS.

just before Auber's birth and said his mother attributed Auber's peculiarities and fits to this occurrence. He went into the family history minutely.

A certified copy of the marriage license issued to the defendant and Anna Cope was introduced. The license was issued October 21, 1895, and was never used.

Mrs. Chloe Rodgers, a sister of the defendant, then took the stand. She went into the family history very fully and spoke of her father's peculiarities and his endeavors to commit suicide.

Told of Auber having fits when a boy. She said that he would frequently, while playing, tear his things into bits and have spells of mumping.

One night, shortly after their father's death, witness found him up dressed at 2:30 o'clock in the morning and he said he was going down to open the store. Another night they found him with a shoe and he said he was killing rats. Said he had killed a number. One night he was heard talking to himself and they locked him in his room. The next morning some of their mother's clothes were missing and were later found in Auber's trunk.

She told of his peculiar actions at the time of his mother's death. How he went into the room with the body and talked to it. He claimed that his mother talked to him but he could not understand much that she said.

She said that Auber had the idea that people were following him and nearly always carried stones in his pocket with which to protect himself.

James Anderson, another brother of the defendant, and Mrs. Allie Teter, a sister, were on the stand Friday afternoon and Monday and Tuesday. Their testimony was to the same effect as their brothers and sisters who had previously testified. It was confined almost entirely to the family history and stories of peculiar actions and fits of the defendant. They tried a number of the same incidents previously related. Nothing new developed in their testimony.

The defense expect to have all their testimony in by some time Wednesday. The state will then take up the rebuttal and it is hoped to have all the testimony in this week.

The Life Earnest.

High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease and start on some fresh march of faithful service. And, looking higher still, we find those who never wait till their moral work accumulates, and who reward resolution with no rest; with whom, therefore, the alternation is instantaneous and constant; who do the good only to see the better, and see the better only to achieve it; who are too meek for transport, too faithful for remorse, too earnest for repose; whose worship is action, and whose action ceaseless aspiration.—J. Martineau.

Unchanging Laws of Etiquette.

It is astonishing to see how little the standard of good manners seems to have changed since the middle ages.

The strenuous life and the higher education have not altered our conception of the laws of good breeding, even if they leave us little time for the carrying out of them, and the rules of conduct upon which we have all been brought up are in many respects the same to-day as those propounded in the manuals of etiquette of hundreds of years ago.—Ladies' Field.

His Chance.

"But maybe you don't like to hear the smart sayings of other people's children," said the man who had been reeling them off for an hour.

"Yes I do," responded the other man. "I think they ought to be imperishably preserved. I sell phonographs, dollar down and a dollar semi-occasionally. How about one?"

"There was nothing to do but invest.—Exchange.

Willing to Chance Him.

The angular widow stood beside her third prospective husband.

"Madam," said the old minister, "do you take this man for better or for worse?"

The angular widow smiled her broadest.

"Wal, parson," she drawled, "he's powerful better than my first husband and powerful worse than my second, but I reckon I'll chance him, anyhow. Let the ceremony go on."

Solace for the Many.

"What a misfortune it is that the public encourages so much trashy literature!" remarked the man with black-rimmed eye-glasses.

"It isn't a misfortune," answered the practical person. "It is a blessing. It enables people whose books won't sell to imagine they have written classics."

Rivals in Fame.

"They are making a great stir about the pianist."

"Yes. The advertisements make almost as much fuss over him as they do over the make of piano he plays."

TOPIC NEAREST TO HER HEART.

Whether or Not He Was Married Interested the Girl Chiefly.

Seeking to know how best to interest her in his conversation, I hid me to the wise man, who spoke and said: "Speak thou of many things. So long as she ejaculates, the subject thou must change; but when she asks a question, then will you know the topic that is nearest to her heart."

Whereupon I returned unto the maiden and lifted my voice most tunelessly into speech.

"I was talking to a friend of mine as I came along the street," remarked I unto her. "He is a writer of books and has seen the strangest sights and scenes."

She turned to me the face of innocence, but nothing said.

"He has traveled in distant lands, has sailed the seas and triumphed o'er the mountain tops. He has braved the snows of Alaska and the tropic sun of the Amazon. India has been his stamping ground, and over China has he widely roamed."

"Just to think!" she cried.

"He has studied the picture galleries of the whole wide world: London, Vienna, Paris, Florence; he knows them from vestibule to roof—column, base and architrave."

"The ideal!" she cried.

"He has slept in the house where Dickens was born and has paid his pilgrimage to the room where the great Thackeray breathed his last. He has sat at the table whereon Balzac wrote, and Kipling and he are the most particular friends."

"You don't say!" she cried.

"He was a war correspondent and made a record in the Boer war. At Port Arthur he ran the blockades both by land and sea and twice was left for dead upon the field."

"Gracious!" she cried.

"Before that he was a dramatic critic, and the boldest actor trembled at the words that he might say. He knew the stars that twinkled in the firmament and all the minor constellations on the broad and great white way."

"Fancy!" she cried.

"He has hunted the tiger in India and the elephant in Africa. He has tracked the lion to its lair and the leopard to its den."

"You don't say!"

Whereat I paused, breathless and discomfited, for never an interrogation had she made, and vainly did I cudgel my mind for the topic that was nearest to her heart, but as I was about to make retreat, lo, she raised her face and queried:

"Is he married?"

The Woman and the Feline.

A western judge—let us hope he had been singularly unfortunate in his female relatives—recently remarked that all women were cats. Women read that press dispatch everywhere, one morning, and for a few hours at least the ears of that judge must have burned, writes Isabel Gordon Curtis, in Success Magazine.

Still, there are women who indorse his judgment, although they feel that he might have qualified his remark and said: "Some women are cats."

One can't help wondering why poor pussy, from time immemorial, should have been picked out as the prototype of a mean, treacherous, back-biting woman, for a cat which is well-fed and kindly treated is a lovable animal, and, queerly enough, it is the animal on which most women lavish their love.

A man who studies the traits of dumb creatures tells us, however, that the female cat treats the species of her own sex in a peculiarly mean and vicious manner. It bites instead of backbiting, and, at the first throb of jealousy, will scratch like a good fellow. If that is so, we have to confess that there are cat-like women everywhere, in the lowest rank of life and in the highest, for we have had cat-like queens; clever old Queen Bess had many a pussy-cat trait.

Sticking Pins in Paper.

The modern pin-making machine works automatically and completes the pin, with the exception of coloring and polishing, without the aid of human hands. In 1841 the device for sticking pins in rows of papers was invented by Samuel Slocum of Connecticut, and put in use in the factory where pins were made by Dr. Howe's machine. It was later improved by Thaddeus Fowler. This machine is described as scarcely less ingenious than the pin-making invention. By the use of these devices the total pin product in this country, chiefly in Connecticut, was a little over 50,000,000 gross in 1900, of which about 47,500,000 were ordinary pins, about 1,500,000 were safety pins and about 1,000,000 were hairpins.

The Melodrama Again.

The beautiful heroine stamped her tiny foot on the tiger-skin rug.

"And you dare deceive me?" she hissed. "Didn't you make a vow that you would never tell me another barefaced falsehood?"

In reply the heavy villain flashed a pair of automobile goggles from his pocket and put them on.

"And I have kept my vow, Helene Hominy. I am barefaced no longer."

With a cry of despair the beautiful heroine jumped into the paste-board river.

A Relief to Both.

"At last," he sighed, "we're alone. I've been hoping for this chance."

"So have I," said she very frankly. "Ah! you have guessed, then, that wanted to tell you that I loved you."

"Yes; and I want to say 'No' and get it over with."
